

YAQUIS RAIDING AMERICAN FARMS

Richardson Construction Company
Reports Colony from United States in Great Danger.

CRUISER RALEIGH IS ON WAY

TOPOLOBAMPO, Mex., Dec. 10.—

(Via Radio to San Diego, Cal.)—Yaqui Indians are now on the war-path and are raiding the American settlement in the Yaqui valley, according to reports just received from Guaymas. The Richardson Construction company, which owns approximately 1,000,000 acres in the valley, has sent out an appeal to the American consul at Guaymas asking that protection be immediately furnished, as the American colony is wholly without protection in the valley, where the Indians are reported as raiding farms, driving off stock, burning American harvests and moving toward the experimental station. No American casualties have been reported.

Five hundred Indian warriors engaged Mexican troops for three hours yesterday along the Porfirio Diaz canal between Coicorit and Esperanza, but the result of the encounter has not been learned. Admiral Winslow, who is here with the cruiser San Diego, has directed the cruiser Raleigh, en route from Guaymas to Topolobampo, to proceed to Tobarí bay, which is the nearest approach to the American settlement. The Raleigh is due to arrive there early today.

Earlier advices from Guaymas state that 900 infantry sent south from Hermosillo especially for the protection of the Yaqui district arrived in the valley yesterday, but they continued on to the southward, as did a part of the cavalry from Esperanza.

Indians attacked the garrison protecting the Southern Pacific employees repairing the bridge over the Yaqui river, and fighting continued yesterday and early today at that point. Three railroad officials have sent an appeal to General Dienes for greater protection in this district, as has been promised.

Alice Visits "Toy Town"

AT BURGESS-NASH

Sees the Queen Doll and Many Other Marvels.

LED BY QUEER WOODEN MAN

She is Almost Run Over by the Limited
Express, But Everything
Ends Happily, as Usual.

Little Alice's mother took her down town to Burgess-Nash Toy Town, where, on the fourth floor, dwells Santa Claus, who writes long lists of juvenile wants in his big bookkeeper's ledger.

"Now, what is it you wish me to bring you for Christmas, little lady?" asked the kindly saint, as tiny goldenhair was led timidly forward at the end of a parental forefinger.

When Alice had told him all about the wonderful doll and the many other things she wanted, he all down carefully and would have kissed Alice if Alice's mother had not mistrusted the long white whiskers.

SOMETHING HAPPENS TO ALICE
Just then something funny happened. There was a blur of lights and Alice clung tightly to her mother's hand until it was over. But when it all became quite clear again—what do you think? Alice's mother was gone and she was holding to the long wooden fingers of a queer little wooden man, who was leading her through long aisles filled with gaudy toys and explaining hoarsely as he progressed.

"You see that large doll there, the one with blue eyes and golden hair," explained the wooden man. "She is queen of the dolls, but she is most awfully stuck up and will not even look at the others, so I think we will hurry right by her or we may be snubbed."

FORGETS HER HURT FEELINGS
Alice's feelings felt somewhat hurt, but in a moment her attention was distracted and she forgot her wounded dignity.

"Oh, listen," she exclaimed suddenly. "Isn't that just too sweet? Why it sounds just like a lady singing in our big Victrola at home, but I don't see it anywhere."

"No," said the wooden man. "It's not a Victrola, but it is a little talking machine that will reproduce any voice or sound the big Victrolas will."

"Why, I know that song," said Alice, "mother sings that to me often."

Just then little Alice caught a glimpse of what she thought was a great commotion—birds, animals, men, etc., running around in all directions, jumping over each other, falling down and making all manner of noise. She tried to tell the wooden man about it, but he would not listen, but insisted that they go over and look at the trains.

And in a moment they were standing beside a miniature track and watching the trains roar past on their way to distant parts of the great city of Toy Town at Burgess-Nash.

TUNNELS THROUGH TOY TOWN
There were tunnels through mountain sides and Dutch windmills and town houses; a big sand derrick gate driver and all sorts of odd things along the track.

A light flashed along the track and before Alice could ask what it meant the wooden man exclaimed, "That's the danger signal, the limited express is coming."

But Alice was so fascinated that she was not quick enough, so the wooden man seized her arm and attempted to drag her away by force.

"Oh," cried Alice, "you are pinching my arm. Do stop or you will make it black and blue. Mother says—" but the wooden man was gone and the limited must have slipped by very quickly indeed, for it, too, had disappeared and Alice had only been asleep for two or three minutes and her mother did not even guess it—she was so busy buying Alice the big stuck-up doll that wouldn't talk to any of the others.
